Audience knows more than the characters.

Situational Irony:
Events/situations are opposite of what is expected.

Forgery=crime—Nora found this out.

Nora	Forgery, lies, pretends, manipulates Torvald, borrows money, keep secrets, wears costume	Loves husband Torvald
Krogstad	Forgery, blackmails	Loves son
Kristine Linde	Marries for money (lying)	Loves brothers and mom

Torvald	Treats Nora like a child demeaning to Nora, total control, superior, wants Nora to self, keeps Nora in costume, "clean & decent," smart, tough,
Rank

Nora's costume—childlike, doll, "little girl," innocent, feminine, fragile, beautiful, submissive, naive

Torvald's costume—king, boss, power, take charge, superior, strong, supervise, dominant, independent, adult "dad", alpha male,

Why don't they just get rid of the costumes?

Tuesday, 3/26/13 Ongoing Notes:

Literal: actual, physically able, real, exact

Figurative: (figure of speech) not real but use to get a point across, creates an image

Types: idiom, metaphor, similes

Symbolism — special kind of figurative language, represents something, some big concept

Nora's costume is symbolic—represents female gender role

- innocent
- childlike (naive)
- inferior
- weak/fragile
- beautiful
- maternal/nurturing

costume party—play the role = act

Nora wants to get rid of the "costume" of her female gender role.

Wednesday, 3/27/13 Ongoing Notes:

- Torvald imagines/pretends when he looks at Nora—the illusion of what he wants her to be,
- Nora is a fantasy of his
- Rank is this "dark cloud setting off our sunlit happiness"—Rank's real function is to set off

Nora & Torvald's relationship.

- Rank helps Torvald "wear his costume"
- rank (small r) something that smells bad
- Rank & Nora both below Torvald
- think about juxtaposition
- Torvald has everything compared to Rank
 - Remember "Jeep Girl"
- Nora does not have a "charmed life" but acts like she does
- Who created these costumes (gender roles)?

Thursday, 3/28/13 Ongoing Notes:

- Noble—sacrifice = "miracle"

Kudos to Gwen and Michaela and Gabby and Kyle for a magnificent reading of today's final reading of the play.

Hereditary— passed down

Papa—Nora—children

Nora first gets all of her ideas from Papa and then gets them all from Torvald.

Nora—realizes she must decide what I believe

Papa (her father) has flimsy values

Torvald only really cares about his reputation.
